THE PRINCIPLES, NOT THE RULES

A healthy diet is a set of proportions rather than a list of forbidden things, and the proportions are what the Eatwell Guide shows.

At least five portions of a variety of fruit and vegetables a day. Base meals on potatoes, bread, rice, pasta or other starchy carbohydrates, which should make up just over a third of what we eat, and the NHS advises choosing higher fibre or wholegrain varieties, such as wholewheat pasta and brown rice.

Eat some beans, pulses, fish, eggs, meat and other protein foods. Have some dairy or alternatives such as soya drinks and yoghurts. Choose unsaturated oils and spreads, and eat them in small amounts; the NHS names vegetable, rapeseed, olive and sunflower oils as the healthier kind.

Foods and drinks high in fat, salt and sugar sit outside the main part of the guide, because they are not needed for health. That is not the same as banned. The advice is to have them less often and in smaller amounts, and that group includes butter and ghee, which is worth knowing before you cook with them.

COOKING FOR A PARTICULAR PERSON

Cooking for yourself is a skill. Cooking for other people, affordably and well, is the one that matters.

That means working to three constraints at once: what they can eat, what you can afford, and how long you have. Write all three down before choosing the dish, because changing your mind afterwards wastes the shopping.

Cost per portion, not cost of the shop, is the number to work out. Beans and pulses are usually the cheapest protein by a wide margin, which is why they feed most of the world.

Read three labels properly

Go and look at a real thing. This is the lesson, not the warm up.

READ THREE LABELS PROPERLY

Take three packets of a similar food and read the ingredients lists, remembering they are in order of weight, heaviest first.

Write down which has the shortest list, where sugar and salt appear in each, and which you would buy now that you have read them. Note also anything you would need to check before serving it in a Muslim household.

SAMPLE PAGES

You have read a few pages. The pack is longer.

What you are holding is a short sample, taken from different parts of the pack so that you can see how a week is planned and what a child is actually asked to do, before you decide.

The complete pack, and the rest of the academic materials, are on our website: schemes of work for a parent teaching at home, and practice packs for the skills children get stuck on.
